

Penicillium, My fluffy pet

In a world where molds live secretly in cabinets and forgotten food packaging, we as the human species are not used to seeing molds in their prime. They are mostly thrown away before they can show you their beauty and abilities.

In a world where Penicillium is not only thrown away upon sight, it is also used in the advantage of people. Eaten in a nice cheese or used to beat that headache.

In this world, we forget why mold is on this planet. To break down organic matter. Something that is especially necessary in this world where we as people overproduce tons of food.

In a (western) world where there is more food produced than necessary. And mold is hiding in our houses, waiting until there is some food left left over. I am giving this creature a place to do what it does best, eat.